The Mystique of Intention

THE POWER OF THE COLLECTIVE by John Hagelin

A remarkable series of scientifically credible studies has shown a link between group meditation and lowered incidents of violence and crime. And why not? argues Hagelin: If meditation is good for the individual, it should also be good for the collective.

Byron Belitsos interviewed John Hagelin for their Intention Downloads. It is truly spectacular. He asked some great questions and John's brilliant replies really took this current Intention debate to a deeper more comprehensive level of understanding, equating intention with thought, distinguishing between thinking and consciousness, and how one can enhance one's intentions multifold from a deeper level of consciousness.

John Hagelin on the Intention Download Series

John Hagelin | 06.26.07 |

In this interview, quantum physicist and former Presidential candidate John Hagelin explains the difference between intention and consciousness, which opens the door on a fascinating discussion of how spending time in deep meditation in the “nuclear” level of thought can multiply the efficacy of intentions. Residing in object-free consciousness connects us to a field of pure, unlimited, creative potential, which in turn ripples out through the quantum field, affecting our lives and even large systems in positive ways. He cites studies he has been involved in showing that a critical mass of meditators has correlated with significantly lowered crime rates. He also predicted similar effects on complex systems from hurricanes to stock markets, with positive results so far. Scientific study of such effects is gaining steam and his ambitious Invincible America Assembly project plans to take this work to the next level, training a critical mass of meditators to positively affect the rates of violence for the entire planet.

Both the article and interview complement and extend each other's understanding of the how the power of a large group practicing Maharishi's TM and TM-Sidhi programs can help transform the consciousness of any nation and bring about world peace.

IONS is doing valuable work, facilitating the understanding of this cosmic paradigm shift the planet is going through.

Enjoy!
